RART ONE: Reading A) COMPREHENSION

(15 points) (08 points)

Read the text carefully and do the activities.

More than 3,300 Egyptian children were hospitalized in Suhag on March, 15 after an outbreak of food poisoning at several state-run primary schools. The incident was one of the biggest food-safety cases to hit the country in years.

Children began vomiting within an hour of eating the lunches. A total of 3,353 children became ill, and at least 50 ambulances were sent to the schools. Since then, all but 17 of the students had recovered and been discharged, luckily, no deaths or serious complications were reported.

Officials suspected that school lunches might have been contaminated so they opened an investigation and analyzed samples from the lunches, consisting of processed cheese cubes, dry sesame paste bars and loaves of bread.

This case revived complaints over the declining quality of Egypt's public education and health systems. Apparently in an attempt to deflect some of the anger, the governor of Suhag quickly suspended the distribution of government meals and demanded to make some changes to how they were stored and transported to schools.

A smart way to leverage a media story is to run highly targeted digital advertising in the same geographic area that the story will appear. When consumers see the ads, they will recall that they saw your product on media and they will build a personal history with it because they might come across it on multiple platforms.

Advertising is one expense that is actually becoming cheaper. Not too many years ago, single-message newspaper ads or radio spots were high-cost methods of advertising. Today, through digital advertising, we can produce highly targeted messages, and deliver them to your unique audience at a fraction of the cost. It is no wonder that digital advertising now accounts for nearly 30 percent of all advertising spending. Running ads on Google, Facebook, Bing or LinkedIn gets your product in front of the right eyes at the right time. However, it is also a rapidly evolving process that can be intimidating to set up, especially if you are not proficient at using keywords, pay-per-click, remarketing, frequency capping and other digital advertising tactics.
